THIS BOOK IS PROUDLY DEDICATED

PREFACE

Owing to the absence from college of a large number of the Class during Senior year, the work of securing and compiling data was largely increased and for the same reason the record of undergraduate activities is confined to the histories of the different years. The Class Day exercises, omitted in June, may be shared by all in the pages of this volume.

On behalf of the Class the Committee here expresses its appreciation of the coöperation of parents and friends of men in Service and of the assistance rendered by the Class Secretaries Bureau.

CLASS HISTORIES

FRESHMAN YEAR

As Freshmen first we came to Yale
Fol de Rol, de Rol, Rol, Rol.
Examinations made us pale
Fol de Rol, de Rol, Rol, Rol.
Eli, Eli, Eli, Yale
Fol de Rol, de Rol, Rol, Rol.
Eli, Eli, Eli, Yale
Fol de Rol, de Rol, Rol, Rol.

One year and two months before that day, the Kaiser printed his circular ultimatum, sent out his armies and declared war upon the world. Two months before that day the Registrar of the Sheffield Scientific School sent out some four hundred admission tickets to Yale University, with Freshman Bibles to match. That day, Thursday, September 30, 1915, at twelve o'clock noon, Europe was in the field, but the "four hundred" of America stood on the threshold of knowledge. The Class of 1918 Sheff was formed. Both facts astounded the world. Order was to come from chaos. The priests ordained it.

The first bit of college life, in which this esteemed body indulged, was a membership in the Yale Co-op, which proved most useful in buying yellow slickers, after the Class had been given the secret grip and kissed the golden goat. Again, the purchase of a pair of goloshes, which were worn unbuckled, with a soft hat and cigarette, stamped the sacred seal of Yale upon the new formed organization and launched it on its three years' voyage through New Haven, that dangerous harbor wherein even the keen-eyed skipper often runs aground on an occasional bar, or becomes marooned with (or, like Charlie Chaplin, shanghaied on) a schooner.

President Hadley, appreciating the dignity of America's and now Yale's "four hundred," assisted by several notable professors, gave in its honor a reception, which through courtesy was shared with Academic; and such an introduction to New Haven paved the way for dances, teas, etc., which put the Taft on its feet again and insured Jarvis his pension. Furthermore, the Class, as was the custom, was cautioned in two separate lectures in the efficient ciphering of the "dot-dash" letters of the moral code. Acquaintance was made with Leo, Fish, Rosey, and Cornelius, and Napoleon of Commons, alias the Artful Dodger, said to be the only Harvard graduate in the faculty, came to a position of friendship in the heart of the Class, while John Spaget sold more September Morns than could be made without enlarging his factory. The rush, held a week late on account of poor weather, and financially contributed to by the Class, welded its members together into a unit, which after the formal celebration split, half for New York and the other half for the tall timber. However, there were no disastrous results, so the Class with an unstained sword set out on its journey in search of light and truth.

The term had scarcely begun when Shortie Cheel won his numerals in the Fall Track Meet, and soon afterwards Charlie Comerford, captain of the Freshman Football Team, assisted by Sanders, Zenner, LaRoche, Kirkpatrick, Callahan, Lynch, Coxe, and others in the Class, won a victory over the Harvard eleven, in spite of the fact that the opponents knew our line signals. Hockey called out a good contingent of the Class, and the Freshman Basketball Team was headed by LaRoche. The tread of dancers' feet, the breath of incense and the constrained, yet riotous applause, lured the Class from its books and enticed it into the Music Hall,—later to be the Yale Psychological Laboratory,—where Sandy Clark became official representative and, in response to the demand, Provost Marshal of Dances. When that disorganized, all eyes were turned toward Alba, where Fritz Keith did bravely battle townies one evening until the Fire Department was called to wash the blood from the streets. Soon, however, that lost favor also and the hand of fate carried the dark corner athletes to Republican and the lounge lizards on to the Rock.

The Faculty, realizing the fact that the Class of 1918 S. was not like most entering classes, swaddling clothes under one arm and a milk bottle in hand, but that they had long since been graduated from that stage, immediately after the picture was taken, raised the eligibility standard to meet the average intellect. Still the ranks of the officially warned and men on probation were so scant that, late in the year, a physics Professor had his whole division honored according to the above, because someone had merely thrown a beer check at him when the lights went off to illustrate an experiment. But such are always Freshman Troubles, and we again take hope in reading Cicero's words:—Perhaps in later years it may be a pleasure to remember these our present sorrows.

The football mass meetings were the only thing that broke up the Exeter Andover "bull" and even then it was generally adjourned until the participants in the fever of excitement of a crap game in Spence Logan's room would burst forth again, causing riots second only to those initiated at the production of "The Birth of a Nation" in Baltimore. Having relentlessly tracked the upper classmen, with whom 1918 could not speak until February of that fatal year, to their lairs, the trusty members of the Freshman Class discovered such dens as Tuttle's, Ray's, Hof-Brau—especially popular on free-beer nights—and the Old Heidelberg, and occasionally peered enviously in at the Juniors in the Garde and Heublein's. Again, Mory's was a sacred place not to be stained by Freshman feet, but Longley's—another one of Cafe's places—helped the new comers drown their sorrows in a toasted and a glass of milk.

By Christmas time the loyal sons of Eli had already learned the way to Poli's, the Bijou, the Olympia, and the gallery of the Shubert. Moreover, under the able direction and coaching of the Rabbits—not, however, of the cottontail species—"globe trotting" became quite the popular extra-curriculum activity and a gracious knowledge of the game of Footie descended upon the youngest generation of students to the extent that the understanding of some of the female populace of New Haven was much impaired.

Shortly after the Christmas holidays, Eames Donaldson made the News and carried the Class banner into broader fields, while already Wheeler Williams and Tommie Crawford were contributing heavily to the Record. Harry Knott enabled the Scientific Monthly to float many an issue by furnishing technical photographs of parades and current events, while the Class en masse, with astounding adaptability portrayed the scene of action from "Mobbing New Haven's Mayor" for a Movie Syndicate.

Nevertheless, these laurels were only secondary and the Class as a whole invested in tickets over the Roxbury, Rosenbaum, and Berkeley line to run the blockade of mid-year examinations, while the chemical department, with the coöperation of Professors Hastings and Beach, prepared the embalming fluid in accordance with the best modern practice as announced in the Obituary of the Royal Association of Undertakers, whose motto is, "Dead men tell no tales." However, the tracks of the R. R. & B. road led on to victory and half the Class got honors with the result that the new quality credit system went into effect and Professor Hastings resigned, the blow being too much.

Calling followed in the midst of rain and snow when the Class rushed from house to house ever fearful lest it should stay too long or too short a time at any one place. That nerve-racking week has been expressed symbolically in poetry and prose far better than can here be done. (See Dante's Inferno.) However, the culmination was a broad, conscious grin on the face of the Class as if it had become an integral part of Yale, no longer to be looked upon as an awkward misfit in New Haven but as a part of the institution.

Next in chronological order came the spring offensive; the Class again stepped out into the open, breaking the Highwall windows one afternoon for a pastime. Frank Lynch became captain of the Freshman Baseball Team and was ably supported by Lyman, Comerford, and Crawford. Rally Page headed the crew, while Wier, Soderston, and Underwood gained seats in the boat. Markwell set new pars for the golf courses about New Haven and in an unofficial match brought down the intercollegiate champion to ignominious defeat. Track also called out its share, including Larkin, Thompson, and Coxe, while Garland and Porter were so swift on the tennis courts that the University drew up plans to place Peabody Museum over the historic spot.

Not to be outdone by the field athletes, Pink Moreland gained astonishing proficiency in the art of catching oysters in his mouth after a night's preliminary trials at Mory's. O Tempora! O Mores! Then followed the Class dinner, after which several members of the Class, whose names we will here omit, were to be awarded their letters, D. T. S., for being on the championship drinking team which only surrendered to a fleet of tanks from some place which came down to stimulate recruiting.

And so the spring passed on, Fellowes and Crawford making the News and Williams the Record, while Harry Jackson and Dick Wilson managed informal baseball games in the Booth School lot. Alderman and Rosenberg furnished cars for diversion and the faculty placed another week of examinations on the program before summer came.

JUNIOR YEAR

Each year, the historian, in writing of his Class, says that "this Class was the most brilliant of them all." That 18— or 19— or whatever it happened to be, will go down in the records as the bright and shining light of all the classes that ever entered Sheff. Not wishing to break this sequence and not caring to appear too original we cannot but make the same claim for 1918. And right here a startling coincidence is brought to light; for upon examining the records it is found that when the historian says that 1918 was the most brilliant of them all, he actually speaks the truth. It is indeed a peculiar coincidence that after all these years there finally comes a class about whom it is possible to use super-superlatives and still have the element of veracity present. Let not other classes feel slighted at this, for it is not that we love them less, but 1918 more.

Taking the above as a major premise let us now elaborate and see wherein lies the basis for such modest (?) claim. Turn back a few pages, fond reader, to peruse our history as Freshmen, and forward a few for news of us as Seniors; as Juniors these few pages will suffice.

No one cares very much at this late date whether 1918 won the wrestling matches at the usual Freshman rush, and frankly we don't remember, but we claim a victory anyway—it's always done.

Football held the center of the stage soon after the Fall term

opened. It was pretty apparent that Yale was due for a tremendous comeback and so she was. The history of that season has been fully written and it is necessary to say very little here. Who will forget those two final victories over Harvard and Princeton, and as 1918's contribution to them the game Chet LaRoche played against Princeton? Sent in unexpectedly, his coolness counted much towards the final outcome, Then there was Charlie Comerford, picked by all experts as All-American end, to say nothing of Callahan, Carey, and Hutchinson. All these men contributed much to a season which began with a victory over Carnegie Tech, stopped momentarily with a defeat by Brown (but this was done no doubt so that the odds against Yale on the following week would be very large and we could all make a clean-up—which we did) and ended with a victory over Harvard. At the present writing all of these football warriors are fighting in a greater battle and with equal success.

But other things were happening along with football. On October 21 came the much-talked-of Pageant and it was deservedly "much talked of." All the butchers, bakers, clerks, policemen, and firemen of a past age in New Haven must surely have turned over in their graves as their 1918 counterparts cavorted around the Bowl. Everybody signed up for the mob scene at the last minute and since it needed little or no practice, it was a huge success, which was but natural considering what class had a large hand in it.

The presidential election held everyone's interest for a few days and we've yet to find a member of 1918 who didn't have some sort of a bet on it. The laugh was at first all on the Wilsonites, but as Hen Kyburg said, "he who laughs last laughs Democratically." The "Yale Daily Hughes" (apologies to the Record) had Wilson's opponent elected unanimously for two terms on election night and, as one of the editors said, they couldn't be wrong since they had a direct wire to Republican Headquarters.

With the winter came basketball, hockey, the Globe, and other things. A few of the boys from 1918 were out for the above mentioned teams but when the final line-ups were called no one from our illustrious Class was present. This was due of course to the high standard set by these two clever teams rather than lack of material in 1918. The Basketball Team won the championship and lost only one league game during the season.

The Swimming Team also won the championship, hands down. Dick Mayer and Adams were large factors here while Dexter and Violett swam on the Water Polo Team. It might be added that Mayer swam on the relay team which broke the world's record for two hundred yards.

Along with athletics the Class of 1918 did not neglect the work of the classroom. At the end of the first term Herod,

The Pageant, commemorating the 200th Anniversary of the Removal of Yale to New Haven, portrayed historical scenes from earliest colonial days to the present. Five thousand citizens and students united to reproduce events in the history of Yale and New Haven.

Wier, Claridge, Connell, Durfee, Ford, O'Brien, Stevens, Spang, Williams, and Woodford were hitting the high spots in curriculum work, and continued to do so through the second term.

The Prom came along about here and took up everyone's attention for the moment, after which fraternity rush week was the main attraction. Many of 1918 received their first taste of rushing from the inside and found that the Freshman's part was real pleasure compared to that of the upper classman.

In the spring 1918's fancy often turned to thoughts of Savin Rock and "other things." Aside from this, baseball came in for a great deal of attention, for a championship baseball team would have marked the end of a perfect year in sports. Captain LeGore was shifted over to third base and Norm Lyman played shortstop, while Lynch played in the outfield and Comerford and Carey were promising moundsmen. The team looked like a sure winner but after a few games during Easter was disbanded because of a greater game which was about to be played.

Track was in full swing with Cheel, Ireland, Parker, Keyser, and a host of others doing the honors for 1918. This also was given up when war was declared.

The Crew came through in fine style against Pennsylvania, winning both Varsity and Junior races. Nineteen hundred and eighteen was represented by Underwood as Coxswain. Wier and Soderston also did good work as crew men, to say nothing of Judd, Blackmore, and a number of others.

By far the biggest event of the spring was the declaration of war on April 6. Nineteen hundred and eighteen's numbers gradually decreased while the number of men in uniform in New Haven and elsewhere grew ever larger. Some men left for training camps, some enlisted, some went to France in various units, so that the number remaining in college grew smaller and smaller. In the great work which this country has begun the Class of 1918 has been, is, and will continue to be doing its little part towards vanquishing the Hun.

In closing, it might be well to name a few of the men of 1918 who were more or less in the collegiate eye, although to name them all would no doubt require a larger year book. In the line of athletics not previously discussed there were Levine and Walter on the Cross-Country Team, the latter being elected captain. Loeb was on the doubles team which won the fall tennis tournament, Markwell was our only golfer, while Crawford played soccer. Dexter and Swift were members of the gun club; Davison, Thomas, and Ryan were expert wrestlers, while Schell and Stevens were the Class bowlers.

Setting-up !

Getting away from athletics, we find Medlicott and Dwyer on the Banjo and Mandolin Club, while Greenhouse, Josolowitz, Hull, and Hascall all played on the University Orchestra. Corbin managed the Apollo Glee Club and Hicks was a member; Schmertz and Uihlein were members of the banjo and mandolin branch of the Apollo.

The bright lights among the editors and contributors of the Scientific Monthly were Knott, Buffum, Winslow, Schmertz, Lounsbury, and Off, while Crawford and Williams worked hard for the Record, and Donaldson represented 1918 on the News.

Wiman could be found at the Elizabethan Club, while Blackwell and Laughlin were running things over at the University Club.

And so 'tis done. The history of the Junior year of the Class of 1918 is written. Its outlook on life might be shown, with apologies to Omar, something like this:

'How sweet to Wine and Dine all night!'—think some:
Others—'How blest to Grind till morning come!'
Ah! hit a Happy Medium say We;
A little Sport, some Study, and 'tis done.

A majority of the Class were unable to finish their courses at Yale, but may count their last year well lost in consideration of the greater work which they are doing.

And so since the war excuses everything from six cent car fares to sunshine at eight o'clock in the evening, may it also serve as an excuse for the brevity of this history, though this, after all, is its chief virtue.

FRANKLIN C. LEONARD

SENIOR YEAR

Messrs. Gibbon and Fiske should have been hired for a history like this but, they having thoughtlessly died, the job devolves heavily upon local talent.

A la Paramore, this should open with an invocation of the Muses, but the classic stuff is not so comme il faut these days.

We opened this fall with a strong hand—some of the kings gone, but we're hoping they'll come back aces. A recent communique tells us that Wallie Hoggson has received special commendation down Italy way for going up seventeen thousand feet, which he says was foolish as it means more work. Jake Stanley in the R. F. C. says that out of his squadron, which started training with forty-two, only seventeen are left to fly across the Channel,—but then, they're all English except him. He says he has lassoed the wildest woman in London for the personal approval of ———— (member of the Faculty) when he comes over with the Y. M. C. A. Frank Lynch, who would ordinarily be chasing flies in left field at this time of year, has been reported as escaping almost unhurt from a third or fourth lucky spill, this time in Texas. After leaving college last spring, Ken Smith was first heard of this fall, on being picked up in his airplane by a French destroyer. The rest of our commissioned aviators, Al Redfield, Bill Thompson, Charlie Blackwell, Liv Ireland, who they say flies upside down and picks handkerchiefs off the tree-tops, Al Winslow, George Scott, Nigger Moore, Tommy Dixon and George Laughlin will doubtless all be across by the time this is printed; many of them are already. Wheels Williams left us just before Easter, having decided to apply his Record talents to the Balloon Corps.

Drills preceding the Army and Navy Game

Follows the personnel of grave Council of Seniors: The portfolio of this august body has changed hands about as often as the German Chancellorship, Messrs. LaRoche, Crawford, and Wright having warmed the chair. At the present writing Jer Jenks is wielding the ivory gavel, and has established a new time record of months. Bob Wier collects the fines for the organization sometimes.

After Nor Wright got engaged and left college to earn the wherewithal at the Dayton airplane shops, the Inter-Fraternity Council was left without a head. Moreover, the mortality among the House members became so great that it was necessary to elect several Juniors. However, these men answered roll call at the last meeting, Allerdice, Clark, Leonard, Spurr, Jenks, Macauley, and Dean, the last two being chairman and secretary respectively. The season, by the way, was not as scrappy as usual, and the Council, feeling the need of more Inter-House competition, started a championship pool tournament and arranged for the presentation of a cup to the House having the highest scholarship stand.

Under the guidance of the above, plus that of the two Senior Societies, 1918 S. gloomed on a war-time Prom, revived the

The Y. N. T. U. drilling in the Dining Hall

Class Deacons and started the custom of planting Ivy. Not so bad for Sheff, eh?

Bob Wier, Chairman of the Class Book Committee, with his aides, Knott, Williams, Herod, Cheel, Donaldson, Durfee, Stevens, and Uihlein, seems to be about the only one of the Class Officers who will do business as usual. Since there are to be no Class Day ceremonies, the rest of them, Connell, historian, Frank Leonard, prophet, and Bill Stevens, orator, will have about as much to do as the Czar of the Russias. However, Shorty Cheel and his Class Day Committee, Judd, Schindler, Andrews, and Lyman, have been temporarily awarded the planting of the Ivy,—nice job for an engineer. If the Ivy grows we'll know it's not Shorty's fault. The Triennial Committee is headed by Johnny Wadhams and backed up on Del Ladd and Howard Dean.

Chit left us along in February, sailing for "over there" on a mission as mysterious to us as Major Moretti's sudden appearance in New Haven or Eddie Reed's R. O. T. C. secrets.

The Prize Battery

When the time came for baseball, Norm Lyman was elected captain, and it looks just now as though Gren Parker would also make the team. On the musical clubs we had Al Medlicott, leader of the Banjo Club, and Pat Corbin, leader of the Glee Club. The Serenaders missed out on their trip to Texas this year, but at least three had the honor of performing at the Armenian Relief. (We think it probably was by the time they got through.)

No roller skates or tops for us; we've had our time taken up with Artillery and Naval work raised to the *n*th power. By the way, we had a couple of captains in each branch of the service, namely, Howard Dean and Drew Blackmore in the R. O. T. C., and Dud Parker and Del Ladd in the Y. N. T. U.

Of "honest-to-goodness" officers we have a slew. In the Field Artillery there are Captains Bill Carey and Si Sweeney, Lieutenants Dick Ryan, Jim Brooks, Art Ball, Fred Hammer, Ches Garland, Pete Borden, who has been under fire already

The Archbishop of York, President Hadley, and Professor Abbott reviewing the R. O. T. C. and Y. N. T. U. on the Green and had a couple of horses killed right next to him, Cam Keyser, Al Farwell, Spence Brainard, Gravy Davison, Mac MacArthur, Hank Kenly, Joe Sharp and Henie Kyburg, and Tony McKim in the Infantry.

On one of the recent casualty lists Squab Manning's name appeared under "slightly wounded." Squab enlisted in the Hartford Cavalry with Pete Sargent and Bill Hart, but the government preferred machine gunners at that time so that's what they became, whether or no. Speaking of poilus, Red Moreland has pulled down a Croix de Guerre for bravery under fire. Some iconoclast or other suggested that Red didn't even hear the shells popping around him. But it used to be a matter of not wanting to hear with Red, as when Pete Weldon would ask him whether $AgNO_3$ and HCL made a precipitate, etc.

The Class hasn't appeared particularly bashful with the girls so far. See for yourself. Here's the list of benedicts: Bill Carey, Spence Logan, Ted Dyer, George Laughlin, Liv Ireland, Wiman and Wyman.

Dope from Ensign Lou Sperry says that he is on a tramp transport which makes twelve knots and carried a couple of great big three-inch guns. We wish you luck, Lou! (The new "subs" make eighteen on the surface and mount two six-inchers.) In LaRoche and Zenner we have two Ensigns of the Regular Navy, both bunking together on the Arkansas. The other future admirals are mostly on submarine dodgers, some of them commanding. They are Rolly Page, a sure one on this year's crew, Tommie Thomas, who'd most likely have been an intercollegiate wrestling champ, Dud Parker, who, when he left us, was about ready to receive the mystic key to the Sigma Xi tomb, Rus Crothers, and Hoby Thompson.

The Sheff Monthly and the Y. M. C. A., as well as the Record, suffered a loss when Tommie Crawford left college directly after the Freshman Rush. It was then up to Harry Knott, the only surviving member of the Board, to elect himself chairman, circulation manager, editor and the whole works. He did, but we suspect politics in the election. However, he generously conceded the Treasury to Ted Wyman, and granted two more sinecures to Jack Schmertz and Wheels Williams.

Item: Darb Weston is sawing wood up in Scotland. Tried to make the aviation recruiting officer think that a red handkerchief was green, and they showed him the gate.

It is now our unhappy duty to record the deaths of Wallie Winter, half-back on the Freshman Football Team, and Irv Moore, both of the Cloister. Irv Moore, though not an athlete, was well known to the whole Class, and got by with every one. He died of pneumonia at Newport where he was stationed in the Naval Reserve. To Wallie Winter, member of the Lafayette Escadrille, belongs the honor of being the first man of the Class of 1918 S. to die in action. His plane was brought down by enemy fliers behind the German lines.

The Class of 1918 Sheff is proud of its members in service. Out of an entering class of four hundred and twenty-five, one hundred and thirty-two remain today, and of these the majority are engineers whose service to the country requires their graduation. It has been at all times a struggle for those of us who have remained to stay until the end. We have confidence, however, in the efforts of President Hadley and Major Reed to find a place for us, too, at the front, and, God willing, summer will find one hundred and thirty-two more of us in service.

CLASS DAY

CLASS HISTORY

Gentlemen of the Class of 1918 S.:—

It is not without compunction that I take up my pen to chronicle the adventures of this illustrious Class, for, as my good friend Professor Abbott suavely puts it, "The cream of the Class is gone." Of that band of four hundred and twenty-three sunny-faced youths who elbowed their way into North Sheff on that September morn of 1915, and, by "filling out the cards," proceeded to become bona-fide members of Dr. Sheffield's Academy for Backward Children, less than a hundred remain to assist at the last rites of their college course. Hence my remarks are bound to concern, in a large measure, those who are not here to defend themselves from the ungracious knocks usually inflicted by a Class Historian. Even you, who have learned the two sad lessons that Shepard's make-ups are harder than his finals, and that Robinson Crusoe enjoyed an absolute monopoly until the latter part of the week, are spared the indignity of lolling about the grass on the front lawn and listening to an oral delivery of his classical chronology. Perhaps, later on, we will all agree that Francisco made a remark when he said, "For this relief, much thanks."

It has been the custom of my predecessors to begin such documents with an allusion to that quaint Gothic structure on Meadow street—the railroad station. Inasmuch as the work on the new station has actually begun, and bids fair to be well under way by the time we assemble for our sexagesimal reunion, we will pass over this feature and come to the first real event in our college career—the Freshman rush. Who can forget that night when we filed meekly up Hillhouse avenue behind the upper-classmen, and received our first lesson in the terpsichorean art of snake-dancing? It was on this memorable occasion that Tommy Crawford proved himself a knight of the mat as well as a knight of the pen and saved us from a complete shut-out at the hands of the Juniors. A careful survey of the Freshman Blue Book has failed to shed any further light on our exploits of Freshman year. It does show, however, that Bridgie served two successive years as President of the Prohibition Club at Exeter, and that "Rod" Herod absolutely refused to go to Ringling Brothers Circus unless he went in a jitney. Lack of space prevents me from going into this jitney affair in more detail, so I will simply say that the chauffeur was deaf and the judge refused to give him a hearing. If any of you are contemplating law as a profession, you will do well to confer with Herod who can give you some inside dope about listening to evidence.

In these days of "Freshman parades" and "One Hundred Dollars and Costs," we are treading on dangerous ground to mention Alba Hall, but just a word in passing. Eager to make the acquaintance of the social lights of the Elm City, a few of our High Wallers journeyed over to a well-known Jazz-Resort on York street. The townies, who had evidently been reading Taussig, were endeavoring by cut-throat competition to form a holding company, and monopolize every skirt in the place. When it came to giving up the females, the townies were, what we might term, conscientious objectors. A riot was avoided but it looked for a time as if the Alba Hall Incident would rival the Phoenix Park Murders for a place in the oral review.

Around Mid-Years the University was honored with a visit from the Pan-American Delegates, and Lounsbury acted as interpreter for our Latin-American visitors. On the last day of the Conference, he was strolling through the Green, accompanied by a Chilean Señor who was expressing in affable Castilian his appreciation of his reception. During the conversation, a pair of New Haven's fairest walked by and the South American remarked, "What you call in éste país, Chickee!" After that, Ralph decided that his services as an interpreter were not needed.

Our principal athletic achievements in Freshman year were the victory of Comerford's football team over Harvard, the Memorial Day baseball game in which Harvard was also defeated by Frank Lynch and his associates including "Home-Run" Brainard, and the winning of the American Henley at Philadelphia. "Bob" Wier, "Art" Page, and "Art" Underwood were members of this crew which defeated both Penn and Annapolis. Many of the Class spent the summer at Tobyhanna where they were initiated into the pleasures of camp life. Speaking of Tobyhanna, the following story was recently told me. It concerns a certain classmate of ours whose name I withhold by request. Company X assembles for drill. Officer gives commands as follows: "Attention! Present Arms! Port Arms! Right Shoulder Arms! Right Face! About Fa—Here, here, what are you breaking ranks for?" Whereupon our rookie friend replies, "You don't seem to know what you want." One day at mess we received the startling news that "Spence" Logan had joined the ranks of the Benedicts.

The Yale Pageant ushered us into Junior year. Practically every member of the Class took part in this gorgeous spectacle which rivalled the ancient days of Rome in its stupendity and realism. This applies especially to those of us who had the good fortune to take part in the famous Town and Gown Scene and after being soaked to the skin by the firemen, were hurried from the Bowl and forbidden to witness the rest of the show. Speaking of dramatics have you ever walked by the Biological Lab and heard the unearthly shrieks of those cooped-up canines? Upon questioning the janitor, I was informed that it was the Sheff Barnstormers' Association rehearsing for a production of Uncle Tom's Cabin to be given as an additional feature of Class Day. This production was to be followed by a series of historical tableaux. The first panel shows Brian O'Brien all primed for an impersonation of Benjamin Franklin hammering out the first Sigma Xi key. Next comes Sharp as the Shade of Summer in a dramatic monologue entitled "The Forgotten Man or Why Were We Not Quizzed on Dickinson's Modern Symposium?" The third and last scene shows a group of Mechanical and Electrical Engineers all locking their doors at the Fort Pitt Hotel in Pittsburgh to avoid being disturbed by midnight intruders.

Our Class was ably represented on the championship Football Team of 1916 by "Charlie" Comerford, "Bill" Carey, "Tim" Callahan, and "Chet" LaRoche. The work of this quartet brought tears to the eyes of Percy Haughton by beating Harvard for the first time since the good old days of "Ted" Coy.

During the winter "Russ" Dean and "Dick" Mayer showed that Charming Annette had nothing on us in the line of aquatic ability. "Dick" was a member of the Relay Team which broke the world's swimming record for two hundred yards in the meet with Columbia. In the spring of Junior year those of us who were enrolled in that course known as Neglect—er, I should say, Select, made what the instructor called a wild Cook's Tour Through the Fine Arts. We ambled over to Anderson's Gym (the scene of many a previous happy hour) and were taught the mysteries of the demi-semi-quaver and cautioned not to linger too long at the last bar. The ability of the Class was well demonstrated at the first test when one member ascribed the writing of the Moonlight Sonata to Ethelbert Nevin and still another said he could never remember who wrote Handel's Largo. Later in the course we went over to the Art School to see the Jarves Collection. On our first visit, a few of us turned to the right instead of the left, and not until we heard a muffled scream did we realize that we had violated the sacred precincts of the Life class. It was at this point that Bonner Bakewell decided to abandon his scientific career and enroll as an Art student.

During the Easter vacation came the news of our entrance into the Great War, and intercollegiate athletics were immediately suspended. From this time on Sheff Town has gradually assumed the appearance of a West Point or an Annapolis with its ever increasing number in khaki and duck. A big gap in our ranks was made at this time when many of the fellows enlisted without waiting to finish out the year, men like "Doc" Child and Frank Wedge who are now wireless hello girls in Porto Rico, "Art" Page, a member of the Varsity Crew, Q. Violett, our water-polo star, "Bob" Larkin, who is now showing his ability as a hurdler in the trenches, also Hobart Thompson, "Liv" Ireland, Howard Manning, "Si" Sweeny, "Mac" Clark, "Ed" Fellowes, and the Corey twins.

At the beginning of Senior year, we were told that it was part of our duty to keep the American college open for business as usual, and in looking back on this eventful year we cannot help but feel that 1918 S. has done its bit. In the R. O. T. C. we had Captains Howard Dean and "Andy" Blackmore while Dwight Harrison, "Al" Macauley, "Happy" Tice and "Rod" Herod were Lieutenants. In the Y. N. T. U. "Del" Ladd, "Dud" Parker and "Bill" Stevens were Company Commanders. As Section Leaders we had "Art" Haynes, "Ed" Wyman and "Bob" Mason.

"Norm" Lyman was Captain of the undefeated Baseball Team, and Talcott has developed into the best college twirler of the season. Parker and Lynch were also members of the team. "Pat" Corbin was leader of the Glee Club; Walter was Captain of the Cross-Country Team; "Del" Ladd was manager of the Soccer Team, Wheeler Williams was editor of the Record, Eames Donaldson was managing editor of the News, Mayer was captain of the Swimming Team and Thomas was captain-elect of the Wrestling Team. "Shorty" Cheel won a "Y" in half-mile at the Triangular Meet and Harry Knott steered the Yale shell over its new course on the Housatonic.

The following conversation overheard one evening not long ago at the Far East will serve to illustrate two different student viewpoints. It seems that Durfee and Parsons were having an animated discussion about the relative merits of the Sheff courses. "The trouble with you Select guys," says "Durf," "is that you get too much theory and not enough practice. Over in Mason we don't bother with any William J. Burns theories about who gassed Ford in the Chem Lab, or who stole the gates on High street. What you need is more practical training, my boy."

"Hold on," growls Earl. "I guess you never heard of that new course we are having this term. Why, believe me, the Select Course is so saturated with the practical, that now when we have a test in Railroad Transportation, the exam papers have to be transported over three different railroads before they reach the instructor."

Classmates, we are standing to-day on the bridge which leads us from the undergraduate world into the great struggle that is soon to surround us. My attempts at pleasantry seem harshly out of tune with the thought of our absent brothers, who, foregoing all the advantages which have been ours, have already responded to the call to arms. All hail to them on this your Class Day! Throughout the training camps of the country, on the sea, in the trenches "over there," this Class is well represented, and the true history of 1918 S. will be known only when this war is over. The Honor List already bears the names of three of our classmates who have given their lives. Such a spirit has always characterized Yale men of the past. Such a spirit will ennoble future generations when men yet unborn will throng this Campus and sing that glorious anthem, "For God, for Country, and for Yale."

CLASS ORATION

Your days as undergraduates are numbered. Our belongings have been divided and given to the Co-op and second-hand dealers. We have been weighed in the balance of scholarship and passed. But we have not been proven.

Every man of us has three great duties to perform: In the first place to our God, secondly, to our Country, and lastly, to Yale. In order that we might perform these duties with proficiency and thoroughness we have spent our lives in training. We have gone through the school of a child, of a youth and of a man. By the school of a child I mean the training which we (as infants) received from our parents up through the training received in the grades of a public or private school. By the school of a youth I mean the training which we received in high school and in preparatory school. By the school of a man I mean college training.

In college we assimilated ideas which have been brought to us by contact with outdoor men and especially our instructors. And in a scientific school, we enlarge on our subject, in order to take up this subject as a life work. Has this been exactly true this year? No. And, I ask, why not? This is the answer: Every true American has one foremost thought in mind and that is, to "Win the war." And in order to win the war, we have to drop our own special interests and take up national interests. If our course is not leading up to this end, we must, therefore, change it to conform to conditions. Men who intend to study engineering and chemistry can still do so with the knowledge that engineers and chemists are needed to win the war. But the man who has intended to take up business not essential to carrying on the war must change his course of study.

Our college life has changed materially. Athletics, studies, and social events have been changed that they might be of service in the war. We ourselves are more serious than the Seniors of past years. We have had a few outbreaks during our three years, the most noticeable one being the disturbance called the "revolver riot" which occurred last year. But these events which happened during our stay at Yale do not prove or disprove us.

Many members of our Class who left last year and this year for service, have been tested, and found worthy. We find those men carrying Yale's motto far and wide to every nation. Some of these Yale men have been wounded, some have lost their lives. But we have yet to find a Yale man who is a coward.

Turn back to the list of Yale's graduates. There are men in the service from practically every class. The younger men are at the front giving their all, their lives for their God, their Country, and for Yale. The older graduates are doing other government work which is indispensable to the winning of the war. Such are the records which are placed before us that we may have a standard which can be equalled but can never be surpassed.

This year we have an opportunity to prove ourselves Yale men. It is not the kind of opportunity which knocks softly at our door and for which we must be listening in order to hear it knock. This year opportunity opens the door and walks in. But when we try to take advantage of it, we encounter obstacles as hard as steel. In times of peace, once you had located opportunity, it was comparatively easy to grasp it and make use of it. But this year it takes a man of courage and character to make use of his opportunity. No greater sacrifice can a man make than to lay down his life for his neighbor and friend. This is the sacrifice necessary to enable a man to grasp opportunity.

We have been taught to perform our duties efficiently and thoroughly. However, no great general ever went into battle without thinking over his course of action carefully and minutely; no successful author ever wrote a book without thinking his plot out beforehand; no prosperous financier ever put through a deal involving millions of dollars without thinking over the probable consequences thoroughly. And so before we decide what course to take up on leaving college, each man should say to himself, "How can I best serve my God, my Country, and my University?"

The great mistake which many college men make is that they enlist as privates in some branch of the service which interests and fascinates them. This is the wrong course of action. Any able-bodied man can fill a private's or a seaman's position. But to be an officer, an engineer, or a surgeon, a man must be trained. Therefore, let every college man enter the branch of service for which he is trained and make of himself an officer, if he has the requisite qualifications. Our country can get unskilled and untrained men from every walk in life. But there is a shortage of efficient officers. Not every college man will make a good leader by any means. If each man of us stops and thinks before he acts, he will realize that it is up to him to put his training to good use, by proving himself worthy of being an officer and leader of men.

Our first duty is to our God. This includes being square with ourselves, treating our fellow-men honorably and honestly, and realizing that the privations of humanity are our privations and gifts to her are gifts made to ourselves.

Our duty to our country is our obligation to our own race. We are inclined to feel that our little mite will not help much. But it will. The poor man's penny is worth many thousands of the rich man's dollars. It is the spirit in which we perform our duty—not the amount we do. Why has America never been beaten? Why can she never be beaten? The answer is simply this: Her sons never say die; they never even think they are dying; they do not give up. That is the spirit of true courage and manliness.

And our last great duty is to Yale. Three of the pleasantest years in the life of each of us have just passed. In these years we have had every chance to make ourselves men. There have been few rules and restrictions. We have been obliged to attend classes only. And it is now that we realize that there is a great deal more to college life than just classes. We have lived under the Honor system successfully. If a man's character is ever to be tested this is the system which will test it. A man is your true friend and brother when you know that he respects honor above all things and when his word can be believed.

Being square with Yale is but the first step in being square with our country and our God. Every act of indecency we commit, however small, reflects back on our University. People whisper—"There, he is a Yale man." I do not know why, but to some these acts seem to be products of Yale's training. We can make or break our University by our actions. But we will make Yale worthy the name "Mother of Men." And we will prove ourselves, by being manly men.

And now, this hour of parting is the saddest we have ever experienced. We go out alone to fight life's battles as best we may. Classes are things of the past; our dormitories and our houses we leave forever; we have walked rough and stony paths with many of our instructors, perhaps we have had many chats with the Director, not all of which have been pleasant. But we realize now that we are leaving the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale forever. And we are sorry. And we leave Yale with the thought that in the next few years we shall have a chance to prove ourselves. And when the test comes, we want to remember to make the name "Yale" stand for character and truth.

We are not doing Yale a favor by upholding her teachings. But we do show that we have taken to heart what she has given out; that the time spent within her walls has not been spent in vain; and that her democratic spirit will be heralded far and wide as coming from Yale. During our stay at Yale we have been moulded into fit sons of Yale and we now come to our test of manhood.

Our great task is to work for everlasting peace on earth, and to that end we must sacrifice everything. We must uphold the truth that Yale is a "Mother of Men." We must not betray the confidence placed in us by our parents or guardians. But we must and will prove that Yale's motto "For God, for Country and for Yale" is built upon courage, truth, and honor.

In behalf of my classmates I bid farewell to Yale, to her teachings, her influence and her traditions. And I leave with her our sincere promise to make Yale known to the world as a true "Mother of Men."

CLASS PROPHECY

Gentlemen of the Class of 1918 S.:—

It was a quiet spring evening late in June of the year 1933. The soft warmth of the setting sun and its crimson beauty as it slowly sank below the horizon, along with the fact that I had just returned from my fifteenth reunion back at New Haven, had put me in a reminiscent mood. So when my little son "Bobby," aged ten, piped up with "Say, Dad, tell me about your friends at Yale," I assented with pleasure; nay with eagerness, for although the boy had heard me talk on this subject many times before, he never seemed to tire of it—and to me it was always new.

So I told him of the great war, of the parts played in it by men of the historic 1918 Class, of the finish of the war, and then on through until now. I talked of all the men of my college days that I had knowledge of, but there were many names I knew naught of, and there were many who had passed behind the veil during the great war, and afterwards.

"I have often told you, 'Bobby,'" I commenced, "of the famous Yale Division, the 'Fighting Elis' they were called, and well they deserved the name. It was in April, 1920, that German aeroplanes launched from the decks of submarines flew over New Haven, and, with their bombs filled with a new type of explosive, caused tremendous loss of life and property to both Town and Gown. After this there was formed in France a Division composed entirely of Yale men—and you may be certain that the 1918 Class was well represented. There were Captains 'Jim' Brooks and Harold Carey, Lieutenants Frank Corry, Clarence Davison, 'Chris' Garland and 'Bill' Hart. Then there was Captain 'Tom' Kenly and Lieutenants Kyburg, Kirkpatrick, Howard Manny, 'Ed' Munson, 'Dick' Ryan, 'Chet' Stilson, Harold Stuart, 'Dick' Wilson and a host of others.

"It was in the summer of 1920 that the last big Allied drive started. I have told you many times, my boy, of that last smash which ended at the very gates of Berlin, of the Yale Division, which was first to enter the city and of the race between Generals Blackmore, Dean and Macauley to see who could first lay hands on the Kaiser. It ended in a three-cornered tie and so they divided the stakes—a piece of the Kaiser's mustache to each.

"In the official palace at Berlin was found 'Tommy' Crawford in the U. S. secret service. He had been fooling the whole German court for months.

"Above the Yale Division flew the daring aviators. I say 'daring,' my son, for in those days air travel had not reached the degree of absolute safety which exists to-day. There were many of the 1918 boys in this work—some, I remember, who had won their war crosses were: 'Phil' Baker, 'Charlie' Blackwell, 'Tom' Dixon, 'Charlie' Brace, 'Wally' Hoggson, 'Bob' Ireland, 'Stan' Jacques, 'Ed' Leisenring, 'Bob' Moore, 'Ed' Parrott, 'Al' Redfield, 'Burt' Richardson, 'Bob' Newman, George Scott, 'Quen' Violett, and a score of others whose names don't come to my mind off-hand.

"While our armies were advancing, I must not forget the wonderful work of the navy. Hundreds of Hun submarines were put out of commission and then, you remember at the end, balked on land, the Kaiser played his last card—he sent his navy out on the open sea and gave battle. There were many of the old 1918 boys who won their spurs in that last great sea fight. A few who were in high commands were 'Cas' Chisolm, 'Rus' Crothers, 'Ed' Fellowes, 'Johnny' Ford, 'Tommy' Lasher, Douglas Law, 'Art' Page, 'Tom' Parker, 'Ed' Swift, Harold Thomas, Derby Weston, 'Phil' Zenner, 'Tex' Andrews, 'Don' Brown, and a great many more.

"You see, my son, that your father belonged to an illustrious Class in Sheff, a class of men many of whose names resound the world over because of their history-making deeds in the great war.

"I've told you thus far only of the older men in my Class, those who left before their Senior year. Many of the younger ones who stayed and graduated also did big things in the war. I remember some of them well. 'Bill' Stevens, 'Lang' Allerdice, 'Randy' Clark, Page Shindler, Carl Siemen, 'Johnny' Wadhams and half a hundred more."

"But tell me, Dad," said the boy, "where are they all now? What are the old 1918 boys doing to-day?"

This set me thinking. For many years I had lost track of most of the old crew. Of course there had been the reunions, but some of the boys could not come to these. So I decided to take a month's vacation, to travel around the United States in my new one-piece Ford monoplane, and look up some of the Class of 1918.

I had a pleasant trip, was surprised now and then, and confirmed in previous imaginings often. I went slowly, stopping often for some time here and there, and at no time drove more than eight hundred miles a day.

When I returned, little "Bobby" was all eagerness to hear the story of the trip, and so I told him of it from beginning to end:

"I began at New Haven and stayed a day or two to get the news of any of the boys who were there. Murray Spang, as I've told you before, my son, has gone into politics and is now Mayor of New Haven. The people are quite down on him because at a 'riot' last week he so far forgot himself as to join the student 'rioters' himself and before it was over had killed three policemen and wrecked four trolley cars. When interviewed the next day Mayor Spang gave his version of the affair by saying: 'When in Rome do as the Romans do.' This original and pert statement has caused his name to be mentioned as a candidate for Governor next year. The Mayor told me that he was having a successful administration but was much troubled by Nathan Perry's socialistic uprisings. He said also that he had the secret service on the trail of 'Bill' Herman, who was suspected of running a roulette wheel at Savin Rock.

"Sylvester Smith was tending bar at the Taft and is New Haven's best mixer, while I found 'Fritz' Woodford studying art on the corner of College and Chapel streets. 'Herb' Soderston was driving a jitney airline from New Haven to Derby and was making big money.

"I found old Joel Walrus Sharp teaching history in Sheff and took it upon myself to listen to a recitation by one of his Senior history classes. I was particularly impressed by one statement of Professor Sharp. He said: 'Gentlemen, this is entirely unofficial but since my talk with the President I feel safe in prophesying that within one month the United States will, or will not, declare war on Peru. A confidential chat, which I had last evening, with the Secretary of State, strengthened this opinion.' How like another famous prophet, who taught history when I was in college, this sounded—so much so that I almost thought that I was back in 1918 in my old history class again.

"I went out to the old Yale Bowl and found 'Charlie' Comerford coaching the Football Team. Best since Jones' and Camp's, they all told me. 'Chet' LaRoche was his able assistant.

"From New Haven I flew around Connecticut awhile and then continued on up through New England, making various stops here and there at the towns where some of the 1918 boys lived.

"'Pat' Corbin was leading the Orange Band and teaching economics in the high school on the side. Near Wallingford I was stopped for speeding by a traffic cop who was stationed in an anchored balloon. Luckily it was 'Stan' Judd himself, so he let me off immediately.

"In Holyoke I came upon a sorrowful picture. Behind a little pushcart full of silk neckties I found 'Bill' Skinner. 'This is all that's left,' he said sadly, 'the low tariff did it. Crooks!'

"I stayed over night in Springfield and looked in for awhile on Law & Medlicott's new summer 'Burly.' It was a clever show. Up near Rutland, I found 'Tommy' Hascall fishing in a quiet stream, a bottle of (censored) by his side, and a look of contentment on his face.

"From here I started West. Out in Chicago the firm of Greenebaum and Markwell were doing a big brokerage business. Herzig and Block were their main agents in New York. 'Dick' Mayer was a life-saver on Lake Michigan and it was rumored he was engaged to a mermaid. Ralph Uhlein, the boy who made Milwaukee famous, was still a bright light in his home town, and so was 'Prime' O'Brien in his. Fred Keith was preaching in Chicago and had written a book called 'From Bar to Pulpit.' I looked for 'Ted' Dyer in Cleveland, but he had not yet returned from Morris Cove. At Indianapolis I was greeted by 'Duke' Herod—he was town treasurer and doing well.

"From here I aimed southward and in a few hours had crossed Texas, where I found 'Dave' Googins roping steers. Going North through Florida I came down for a moment at Daytona. It was not long before I found Sholtz. After the usual greetings—'How's the wife, Carl?' I said. 'Gone,' he answered. 'Dead?' 'No, alimony.' 'First one?' I inquired timidly. 'No third,' he answered sadly. The sorrowful atmosphere was too much for me. So with a 'Well, try again, kid,' I departed for the North.

"'Jack' Schmertz was still in Pittsburgh. He was following his career—writing for 'Snappy Stories.' Dwight Jamieson was still living in Philly, but threatened to move because the town was too fast for him.

"Up in New Jersey I found 'Del' Ladd head of the mosquito commission. 'There is not a mosquito left in Jersey,' said 'Del,' as he scratched his left ankle with his right shoe and stabbed a man-eater with each hand.

"I was so near my own abode by this time that I called it a trip and came home."

There were many of the boys whom I had not seen, but some I had heard of and read about.

Bobby was getting sleepy, but I thought I would mention again some of the bright lights in our Class who were still in the public eye. So I continued: "You've heard me speak of Eames Donaldson, my boy,—well he is now President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad. His great work has reduced the fare from New Haven to New York to $11.53. Ralph Lounsbury, the famous poet, has just published another volume. It is whispered that he wrote some of his stuff during Professor Keller's lectures back in 1918. W. B. Stevens was elected to Congress immediately after he spoke his Class Oration. At present he is Chief of Police at Deep River. King Joseph James Spurr, II, has opened a cheeja factory in Newark. 'Now, when I was in bally old England'—. Max Porter is his general manager.

" 'Chet' Connell has written a new History of Europe. A friend of his told him that it was the first 'original' history written in a century. It may be had at the Co-op in New Haven. Two volumes.

" 'Norm' Lyman is still captain and shortstop of the New York Giants and is the Polo Ground's biggest drawing card. On the same team may be found Frank Talcott in the box and 'Gren' Parker on first. Wharton Smith is at the information booth in Grand Central. Wheeler Williams is the most logical candidate for next President of the United States.

" 'Charlie' Weed is running a chicken farm near Branford. His college experience made him particularly efficient in this line of work. Harry Knott is editing the New York Times pictorial section and moreover—"

At this point I noticed that little Bobby had gone to sleep. I can only hope that the same thing will not happen to you, gentle reader.
